IS IT RHEUMATISM?

Aren't You Really On the Wrong Track?

A good share of so-called rheumatism is caused by weak kidneys. When the kidneys fail to clear the blood of uric acid, the acid irritates the delicate nerves. Torturing pains start through the effected part whenever it is moved. By strengthening the kidneys, Doan's Kidney Pills have proven their worth in thousands of so-called rheumatic cases, lumbago, sciatica, gravel and urinary disorders. Doan's are well-known in Norway and warmly recommended by Norway people. Read this Norway case:

M. M. Kilgore, Danforth St., Norway, says: "I had backache and rheumatic pains for more than a year. My kidneys were the cause of the trouble. Sometimes I was so lame I could hardly stand. I did not rest much and was feeling miserable when I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I got them at Stone's Drug Store and a few boxes cured me."

Three years later, Mr. Kilgore said: "I have never had the slightest return of kidney trouble since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me."

THE MAKING OF A HOME.

It takes a heap o' livin' in a house to make it home. A heap o' sun and shadder, and you some- times have to really appreciate the things you've left behind. Before you can really appreciate the things you've left behind, you've got to have a heap o' livin' in a house to make it home.

Home's not a place that gold can buy or get up in a minute. Before it's home, there's got to be a heap o' livin' in it. Within the walls there's got to be some babies born, an' then you've got to bring 'em up to be good and man. And gradually, as time goes on, you find that anything they ever used—they've grown into the things they need.

You've got to keep to make it home, you've got to sit and sigh. An' watch beside a loved one's bed, an' know that death is nigh; And in the stillness of the night to see Death's sweet come. An' leave her sweet voice dumb. For these are scenes that grip the heart, and when your tears are dried, you find the home is dearer than it was.

An' tuggin' always at you are the pleasant memories Of her that was, and is no more—you can't escape from these.

You've got to sing and dance for years, you've got to romp and play, you've got to love the things you have, by using 'em each day.

And so the roses 'round the porch must be used by year by year. Before they are a part o' you, suggestin' someone dear.

That used to love 'em long ago, and trained 'em just to run. The way they do, you've got to love each stone and brick, from cellar to roof, in a house to make it home.

Speak O' Sphinx, I need the spell The knowledge of The ages tell. Tell me why, you symbol of Eternity.

We ask of thee, To please unfold, Your secret that is yet unrolled.

Why stand you there, With noble grace, With defiance Printed on your face.

Speak O' Sphinx, Blossom of Eternity, Symbol of thee.

Listen thou O Sphinx to me, Time is your worst Enemy.

Yield to him, You surely must; And your grim form Will turn to dust.

Speak O' Sphinx, We ask of thee, Eternity.

WOODS IN NOVEMBER. Methinks the Autumn woods look bare, The once bright woods now brown and drear, The fragrant orchid long since dead, And bluebirds' song no more I hear.

So cry of loon is onward flight, From lake to lake, at dizzy height, The cold grey branches interlaced, Throw glimmering sunlight here and there, The stillness of the dreary day, Caste gloom and mystery everywhere; And from the dry and darkened wood, Spring vanished days of green and gold.

All sombre woods, thy glory's gone—A knight dismantled for his rest, Soon wilt thou be arrayed anew, With glistening mantle on thy breast. Know then, in shroud of purest white Thy resurrection is in sight.

JENNIE E. SNOW KIMBALL.

There's more Ocatarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together. It is the most fatal of diseases, and is incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Ocatarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Ocatarrh Cure, manufactured by Dr. J. C. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

How Animals Bear Pain. One of the most pathetic things in the manner in which the animal kingdom endures suffering, says a writer in the St. Louis "Globe-Democrat," is the way in which horses, in battle, after the first shock of a wound they make no sound. They bear the pain with a mute, wondering endurance, and if at night you hear a wild groan from the battlefield it comes from their loneliness, their loss of that human companionship which seems absolutely indispensable to the comfort of domesticated animals.

The dog will carry a broken leg for days wistfully, but uncomplainingly. The cat, stricken with stick or stone, or caught in some trap from which it knows its way to freedom, crawls to some secret place and bears in silence pain which we could not endure.

Sheep and cattle meet the thrust of the butcher's knife without a sound, and even common poultry endure intense agony without complaint.

The dove, shot unto death, flies to some far-off bough and as it dies the silence is unbroken save the patter on the leaves if its own life-blood.

The wounded deer speeds to some thick brake, and in pitiful submission waits for death.

The eagle, struck in midair, fights to the last against the fatal summons. There is no moan or sound of pain, and the defiant look never fades from its eyes as it lies close over them never to uncover again.

Dr. King's New Discovery stops those hacking coughs and relieves the grippe tendencies. Money back if it fails. 50c. and $1.00. 38-41-44-47

BORROWING EASIER THAN PAYING

Five Rules for Borrowing Money.
Five rules designed to convince farmers that there is no magic about credit, "How to Use Farm Credit," which the department has just published. Unless the farmer who is thinking of borrowing money fully understands these rules and the Government's advice to him is not taken, as it is, there are probably as many as many farmers in this country who are suffering from too much as from too little credit.

Of these rules the three most important are:
1. Make sure that the purpose for which the borrowed money is to be used will produce a return greater than needed to pay the debt.
2. The length of time the debt is to run should have a close relation to the productive life of the improvement for which the money is borrowed.

3. Provision should be made in long time loans for the gradual reduction of the principal.
The first rule is, of course, the key to the wise use of credit. Between borrowing money to spend on one's self and borrowing money to buy equipment of some sort with which to make more money there is all the difference between folly and foresight, extravagance and thrift. If the money is borrowed for a wise purpose it will produce enough to pay back principal and interest and leave a fair margin of profit for the borrower into the bargain. If it is borrowed for a foolish purpose it will produce nothing and consequently the borrower will be nothing with which to repay the loan. From this point of view it matters comparatively little whether the interest be high or low. It is the repayment of the principal that is the chief difficulty.

Rules 2 and 3 deal with the most satisfactory ways of repayment. Underneath them both is the same principle: The loan must be repaid with the money it earns itself. For example, if the money is used to buy a machine that will last 10 years the machine must earn enough in that time to pay for itself or it never will.

The loan therefore, should be entirely repaid before the 10 years are up or the farmer will lose money on the transaction. Of course the interest could be fit in return. On the other hand if too early a date is set for repayment, the machine will not have sufficient opportunity to make the requisite money and the borrower may have difficulty in raising it elsewhere. Rule 3 provides for some form of amortization, the system by which the principal is paid in installments so that the amount of the loan is continually diminishing and in consequence the interest charges also. Such a system is quite feasible when the loan is really productive, when it returns to the borrower a definite revenue each year. Tables showing the payments required to pay off principal and interest in varying periods of time are appended to the bulletin and are recommended to the serious consideration of everyone who contemplates borrowing money. The bulletin also advises the farmer to secure the lowest possible interest. At first sight this seems too obvious to be worth mentioning. Of course the interest could be as small as possible. Everybody knows that—except the lender. But if the other rules are observed, if the borrower manages his financial affairs soundly, he will be surprised to find how much easier it is to obtain favorable terms. The right kind of lender does not want to foreclose mortgages; he wants his money back with a fair profit, like any other merchant. For money that is borrowed wisely, for money that is sure to be repaid, he charges low interest.

This in fact, is why the Government has published these rules for borrowers. It is not so much a matter of driving a shrewd bargain as it is of observing a few fundamental principles which alone can make credit a blessing and not a curse.

THE COLLEGE FRESHMAN.

The young student's first appearance on the college campus is one of some obsequy. The very word "freshman" suggests awkwardness. Not merely does he feel his rawness, but the older students subject him to some oppressions. This is supposed to be essential to his training.

Formerly this taming took the form of physical hazing. Putting the freshman under the pump is older than any text book. Undoubtedly some impudent spirits took their presumption worn off by such methods. But the average sophomore is not mature enough to set up as moral disciplinarian or censor of manners.

In most colleges now the more active hazing is obsolete. But there are subtler, sometimes more irritating ways of attaining the same purpose. There is a feeling that the freshman is a bumptious specimen, whose self-conceit must be taken down. He must know his place and show due reverence to dignitaries like sophomores. Various humiliations are devised toward these ends.

The freshman is of course a little absurd. His unfamiliarity with his new world. Ignorant of its manners and customs he makes blunders. The sophomore who sneers at them seems an infinitely wiser personage. As a matter of fact, he doesn't know much more. His additional year of study and experience has still left him with the conceits of extreme youth. His college life may even have added to these conceits.

Despite the freshman's various awkwardnesses, he is a very attractive figure. He is full of enthusiasm and ambition. Perhaps these are more obvious than any other qualities. He is more eager than they will be later in the course. He wants to learn how to capture a divergent world, then learn how to capture a divergent world, then learn how to capture a divergent world.

High and preparatory schools turn out very mannerly looking graduates nowadays. These high school graduates provide a pretty full life of their own and the boy as he goes on to college often looks and acts very like a gentleman. There may be little of the awkwardness that the word "freshman" suggests.

CARE OF DAIRY CALVES.

The Production of a Profitable Cow Depends Largely upon the Methods of Handling the Calf.

Careful attention on the part of a dairyman during the two weeks that follow a calf's birth will often mean the ultimate addition to his herd of a large well-developed milking cow, instead of a sickly, undersized, stunted animal. The problem of raising calves is to-day a more complicated one than when it was customary to feed a larger amount of whole milk.

The dairyman will therefore find it to his advantage to take the best possible care of his calves from the very beginning.

Immediately after birth the navel of the calf should be washed with an antiseptic solution and tied with a silk thread in order to prevent infection. For the first feed the calf should have the first milk from the cow after calving and should have its mother's milk for several feeds thereafter. The sooner the weaning takes place the better, but ordinarily it should not be postponed later than the fourth day. The sooner the calf is weaned the more easily it is taught to drink. When first fed from the pail, 8 to 10 pounds of milk a day, fresh and warm from the cow and divided into two feeds, are sufficient. The feeding times should be as nearly regular as possible, and at first it is advisable to feed more than twice a day. The amount fed should be constant; and to insure this, scales should be used, as variation tends to get the digestive organs out of order. At all times the utmost care should be taken to prevent any digestive disorder, as all such trouble hinders the growth and development of the animal. Calf scours is the most common indication of this condition.

The following named precautions, to a great extent, tend to prevent scours: Feed regularly, be sure that the milk is always sweet and warm, in feeding use only clean pails, feed the calf a little less than it will reduce the milk one-half if the animal becomes sick.

The amount of milk fed can be gradually increased until at the end of the second week the calf receives from 14 to 16 pounds of milk a day. At this time the gradual substitution of skim milk for whole milk may commence. Hay and grain should be placed before the calf at this period, and it will be found to nibble at them a little. At the end of the third week the substitution of skim milk for whole milk may be complete. By placing a small amount of hay and grain before the calf, the amount of milk fed may be reduced to 10 pounds a day. If skim milk is plentiful more may be fed, but it is better to feed less than to give proportionately better results.

Corn meal, bran, and oil meal, mixed in the proportion of three, two and one, make an excellent grain mixture. This grain when fed with plenty of fine clover or hay makes an ideal supplement to skim milk in balancing the ration.

Calves should be allowed all the grain that they will eat until they consume three pounds a day; from this point the feeder should use his judgment as to whether an increase is justified.

The calf, from the time it is two weeks of age, should always have access to plenty of clean, pure water.

The general practice is to feed calves skim milk for from two to six months. In the latter case with fall calves the time of final weaning from milk comes in the spring, when pastures are ready. Under this system the calves usually make excellent growth during the entire period without any break in gains.

OLDER BUT STRONGER

To be healthy at seventy, prepare at forty. It is sound advice, because in the strength of middle life we too often forget that neglected colds, or careless treatment of slight aches and pains, simply diminish strength and bring chronic weakness for later years.

To be stronger when older, keep your blood pure and rich and active with the strength-building and blood-nourishing properties of Scott's Emulsion which is a tonic and a medicine to keep your blood rich, alleviate rheumatism and neuralgic pains. No alcohol in Scott's.

The Winter Bee Hive.

South of about 40 degrees north latitude, nearly all bees are wintered on their summer stands. North of that they are mostly wintered in cellars. Yet some beekeepers, even in the far north, prefer out-of-doors wintering. Those who are in doubt would better follow the example of older beekeepers in the neighborhood, who usually winter successfully. Where chaff-packed double-walled hives can be afforded, there is probably no better or safer method of wintering bees, but they are expensive and cumbersome, and bees must be taken out of them during the extreme heat of summer, at least, or excessive swarming results.

In cellar wintering, much depends upon the kind of cellar available. If it should be very wet and cold, even if no standing water is present, it may be a failure, even though neighboring cellars prove to be safe winter depositories for bees.

Winter protection on summer stands is a question of latitude some what of locality. Far enough south no protection is needed. In our state, protection of some kind is most important if we hope to have a strong force of bees at the right time to gather the honey harvest.

As to locality, a place sheltered somewhat from prevailing winds by timber, buildings, or something of the kind, does not call for the same protection as an open plain with full sweep of the winds, but a winter situation is never a suitable place for bees in any season, as the loaded workers, even in a moderate temperature, are obliged to battle too fiercely to gain their hive to be of much profit in gathering surplus honey. Some old-fashioned things are being revived, and for some of them have never been and perhaps never will be improved upon.

The old-fashioned bee house or shed for protecting bees from winter winds and as a shade in summer, with its rows of old-fashioned box hives set close together, with the fronts exposed for bee flights, and straw crowded all around and over them, served a good purpose in protecting them from Maine's cold winter blasts, and greatly assisted them in early breeding in spring.

Some of the strongest colonies that I have ever transferred during fruit bloom came from these old-fashioned bee sheds. Their faults were that where they were set so closely together, bad mixups sometimes occurred at swarming time, and often in early spring, when taking their first flight, one colony would get most of the bees of an adjoining colony or two, while others would be left too weak to build up, and perish. Queens when taking a mating flight often entered an adjoining hive, to be killed by the inmates, who already had a laying queen. If colonies wintered in bee sheds could be every other one set down in front of the shed on the ground, five or six feet from it, and those remaining in it be moved apart a little farther, keeping the same relative positions, less trouble would occur.

With colonies containing clipped queens, boards leading from the ground to the entrance should always be provided, or something to allow the queen to crawl into the hive again when she attempts to go with the swarm, as her clipped wing prevents her gaining the entrance by flying, of course.

In our state bees may be packed for winter the first of November—about the time you will be reading this. The entrance should be contracted to about half the width of the hive, and almost three-eighths deep to exclude mice. Some cover a deeper entrance with wire cloth, have three meshes to the inch, which answers well.

Upon one subject there seems to be a decided difference of opinion—the amount of packing needed, and whether over the frames, with or without a sealed cover underneath. Failures and successes have been the results of both methods. Some protect the colonies by wrapping building paper about the hives, either fastened on with a string or with laths.

The importance of thorough protection on top comes from the fact that some means must be devised to keep the breath of the bees from condensing over the cluster and dropping down upon it, for there is nothing that causes the death of a colony more certainly than cold and wet, especially on their stores, as it causes it to sour and ferment, and if eaten in that state, dysentery ends the colony sooner or later.

A cellar to winter bees successfully should be dark and dry, with an even temperature of about 45 degrees. If the cellar be damp, it must be kept a little warmer. More important still, it should have an occasional supply of fresh air. Bees are never entirely dormant in the cellar, but come the nearest to it at about 45 degrees, and in this condition consume less honey, which is another factor in successful wintering. As they are obliged to refrain the bees during their winter confinement, any plan that causes a less consumption of stores becomes important.

Where a furnace is used it may be possible to keep the temperature as low as 50 degrees or less, but this does not prevent good wintering, provided doors can be kept open, so as to keep the air pure.

If a cellar is too warm more honey is consumed, on account of greater activity, and, conversely, if it is too cold, they must consume more to keep up the animal heat of the cluster. If many colonies are kept in a cellar, they should have a room to themselves, with some sort of arrangement for letting in air without light, but if the number be small, there is no objection to keeping them in the same cellar with fruit and vegetables, provided that there is no large accumulation of any that become decayed. In other words, the air must not become foul with rotteness. Of course, human beings should not be obliged to live over such foul air, but they might stand it after a fashion, where bees would die outright—Maine Farmer.

WOMAN IN THE MODERN HOME.

"A man may work from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done," says the old adage. In the past we have formed the habit of saying that a woman is restricted by the home, ignoring the broad significance of home-maker or "loaf giver," as Ruskin has taught us to say. It is interesting to see how many vocations and avocations this "restricted" creature may find without stirring from the four walls of her home. What modern woman can tell you the secret of combining in herself all the duties of Mistress of the Robes (often made over ones), Chancellor of the Exchequer (making one dollar do the work of five), Educator (for our children learn their lessons at home to recite them at school), Nurse and Doctor (in the prevention and cure of disease), Diplomat (witness our servant problem), Hostess (and often cook and housemaid as well)? Even then she falls far short of her ideals, for "Mother has nothing else to do but have good times with me!"

Modern home cannot restrict the modern woman. Her activities reach to all departments: to our pure food laws, to the sanitation that has reached to the vilest parts of the earth, making them habitable. It shows itself in eugenics and "better babies" contests, in the milk stations and the housewife's league, in orphan asylums and homes for the aged. In fact nearly all our charitable organizations can be traced to woman in the home—to the great mother heart that will not be denied, but determines to help all who are suffering or in need. She touches not only the practical side of life but the esthetic. One of our famous poets was more proud of being the "mother of that beautiful boy" than the author of the Portuguese sonnets. Some of our most charming modern artists have painted their own children in their delicious everyday poses. Our sweetest songs and strongest books are those that picture the home in its purity.

What sends the coal heaver to his task at 7 a. m., the engineer to his hazardous run, the merchant and financier to their daily perplexities? It is the complement of the home—inspiration, cheer and courage. Who will say that the home in Europe today is not bearing the heavier part of this awful war?

Ask the greatest men and women of the world where they gained their inspiration and they will tell you, from the home. Some mother or sister or wife is constantly helping that strong man to carry his burden.

Jack London has written a book of many pages telling of his hope that women may have the suffrage, that their votes may help remove the temptations of drink from the coming generations. Man alone cannot grapple with such a great problem. When world-wide prohibition is achieved it will be because some women, many women, in their homes have wished and worked for it. And when world-wide peace shall come it will be founded upon and made possible by the home.

"Home keeping hearts are happiest,"—yes, for home keeping is the greatest and noblest work of woman. The hearts that safely and wisely keep the home shall grow till they reach the "house not made with hands."

A woman's work is never done. For it shall reach from sun to sun.

A Welcome Type

This is a new and appealing model, just out from the Hudson shops. It is to meet the demand for an all-season car—a car that is never laid up.

It changes from a Sedan to a Touring Car in a few minutes. The windows and the sash disappear. Yet as a Sedan, with seats for five, it has more elegance, more luxury than an electric brougham.

It is a family car which any lady may drive. Yet a Touring Car as well. It's a winter car of the finest type, yet equally a summer car. Perhaps this is just the car you have waited for. Come see the one on show.

EVERYBODY WORK.

Let's everybody go to work! Let's forget about the hard times bugaboo and work—work—work.

Let's bring a stream of gold into this community as a result of the next year's work that will chase the wolf away from the humblest door in the township.

Let's put gold into the pocket of every individual—by work.

We can do it—if we work.

Any community can do it—by work.

"No work to be had" is often a phantom of the brain. It seldom exists for the man who wants to work.

There is work—plenty of it—for people who are looking for work instead of a life of ease, or a soft snap.

If work is slack in one line there is always a demand for labor in other lines.

If the job won't hunt you, go out and hunt the job.

Don't loaf.

Whittling sticks on a street corner never yet has made a man rich or filled an empty stomach.

Swapping lies in the shade of a tree will not bring gold to an empty pocket.

When we wait for money to hunt us the other fellow gets it.

The output of this community might be increased by half—might even be doubled—if everybody worked—worked hard and kept on working.

It will be a great year for some one, for much gold is coming to this country from abroad.

Everybody speak at once!

Then go to work!

NEW SCALE OF PRICES.

The editor of a Down East paper has grown peevish. He has been bothered so much by people desiring free puffs that he refers to himself as the "Peerless Prince of Puff Purveyors."

He thinks he has done enough for social queens, ministers, who are looking for free advertising, people who have legislative fads they wish to push and organizations which want free publicity. So he has evolved the following scale of prices for puffs:

For telling the public that a man is a successful citizen, then everybody knows he is as busy as a hired man, $2.70.

Referring to a deceased citizen as one who is mourned by all the entire community, when he will only be missed by the poker circle, $10.13.

Referring to one as a hero and a man of courage and one who will stand by his honest convictions, when everybody knows he is a moral coward and would sell out for thirty cents, $6.21.

Referring to some gallivanting female as an estimable lady whom it is a pleasure to meet and know, when every man in town would sooner see Satan coming, $3.10.

Calling an ordinary pulpit orator an eminent divine, $6.

Sending a doughty sinner to Heaven, $5.

Referring to a deceased merchant who never advertised in his life as a progressive citizen, $4.99.

Lambasting the daylight out of the demon rum at the request of the local prohibition committee, $6.77.

—Exchange.

Do You Feel Headachy? Look To Your Stomach

It is an unusual thing for a druggist to sell medicine under a guarantee to refund the money if it does not cure. Yet this is the way the Noyes Drug Store the popular drug store is selling Mi-on-a, the standard dyspepsia remedy.

Never before have they had so large a number of customers tell them that a medicine has been successful as with Mi-on-a. People who a few months ago looked like walking skeletons have put on flesh and today are ruddy and vigorous with perfect digestion and good health.

There is no longer any need for anyone suffering or making their friends suffer on account of dyspepsia. Mi-on-a can always be relied upon. The percentage of cures is so great that there is little risk to the Noyes Drug Store in guaranteeing to return the money if the medicine does not relieve. And they stand ready to do so without any questions.

Headaches, all forms of indigestion, sick and the eyes, dizzy feelings, and all forms of liver trouble are helped by Mi-on-a. A few days' treatment should show considerable gain in health while a complete cure often follows rapidly.

MAN.

1.—Man that is born of woman is of few dollars and full of egoism.

2.—He cometh forth like a flower but withered by rent and taxes.

3.—He hustles us at his train and misleads it by three-quarters of a minute.

4.—He crossthe street in the pride of his manhood and is tossed three blocks by a yellow honk-wagon.

5.—Yea, even his stenographer leaveth her chewing gum on his desk chair by accident, and he needs must wear his raincoat home.

6.—What is man but shuttlecock of fate wallowed over the fence by the bat of adversity?

7.—In his infancy he stubbeth his toe and walleth lustily, and in his maturity he acquirith the gout and curseth abominably.

8.—Yea, his troubles do follow him in his young manhood and the first girl to whom he proposeth doth accept him.

9.—Verily, what is man but a stone-bruise upon the heel of existence?

10.—Even he is but a freckle upon the face of Miss Fortune, for when he polisheth his silk hat he absent-mindedly turneth about and sitteth upon it, being therefore the man who putteth loss in gloss.

11.—He runneth for office, nor can any one guess what manner of man it was who cast the other vote for him.

12.—He walleth in the street and a bulldog fallth upon him; he walleth in the fields and an aviator fallth upon him; he hideth in the cellar for protection and the gas meter explodeth and hoisteth him through the floorings unto the third floor; even if he diveth into forty fathoms of water he bumpeth his bean upon a waterlogged plank.

13.—The banister of life adown which he slideth is full of splinters, and the Hand of Fate leadeeth him not but wearth brass knuckles and jabbeth him constantly.

14.—Yea, verily, man that is born of woman is destined to bills and boils, toil and thirst, malaria and matrimony.

15.—And when the end cometh he cannot even enjoy the epitaph provided for him, and the flowers sent to garnish his obsequies are by mistake delivered to the home of his bitterest enemy.

WINTER CARE OF ROADS.

Keep Ditches and Drains Open and Use Road Drag to Prevent Injury by Freezing Weather.

Water, not cold, is the cause of the deterioration of roads in winter, according to the road specialists of the department. Cold weather does not in itself injure roads, no matter whether they are earth, gravel, or macadam. In fact an earth road will stand more traffic when it is solidly frozen than at any other time. Excess water, however, is always detrimental to a highway. When cold weather turns this water into ice, the damage that it does is greatly increased. Ice occupies considerably more space than the water from which it is formed, and every person who has lived in a cold climate is familiar with the powerful bursting effect of water when left to freeze in a confined vessel. The same action takes place when a wet road freezes to any considerable depth. It simply bursts, or, as we generally term it, in a road parlance, the road heaves. Later, when the frost leaves, the road is disintegrated and puts badly. If this process is repeated a number of times during the winter, a gravel or macadam road may be practically destroyed, while an earth road may become entirely impassable.

A dry road will not heave. Rock, gravel, sand, and even clay when perfectly dry contract slightly on freezing. In order to expand on freezing, these materials must contain or be mixed with water and the more water they contain the greater the expansion which takes place. But so long as the road remains frozen the damage does not become apparent. Hence the frequent and erroneous idea that it is the thaw which injures the road. The injury was done when the water in the road froze and the particles of the road surface—broken stone, sand, or still finer particles of earth or clay—were pushed apart by the expanding power of the freezing water. The remedy allows the ice to melt and assume its original volume as water.

The remedy is self-evident. Keep the water out of the road. The time to begin preventive measures is early in the fall, before the rains begin. If the road goes into the winter thoroughly dry, with the surface and drainage in good condition, the chances are extremely favorable that it will come out all right the following spring.

Keep the ditches and drains open. Remove all accumulations of weeds, grass, etc., which tend to retain moisture and obstruct drainage. Furthermore, do this work early, while the ground is still dry and hard. Vegetation and litter hold water like a sponge and allow it gradually to seep in and saturate the earth. The job before the road man is to keep the hard, dry surface formed in the summer time from becoming softened by the fall and winter rains and snows. When road falls rains begin the earth or gravel road should be dragged frequently to prevent the formation of ruts and the collection of water. All raveled places on macadam surfaces should be carefully filled in and consolidated.

During the winter, whenever a thaw is coming on, the cross drains and side ditches should be opened up as far as possible so as to prevent water collecting along the roadway. If the thaw is so pronounced that the roadway is softened, the drag should be used; sometimes one round trip of the drag, with the hitch reversed, will entirely rid the earth road of slush and melting snow and leave the road surface practically dry. Don't get the idea that the drag is not needed on your earth and gravel roads in the winter time. Instead keep it where you can get at it readily, for if the winter is an ordinary one you will need it many times.

Winter destruction begins in the early fall. The best way to prevent such destruction is to forestall it. Keep the road dry and remember that so long as it remains so it will not be seriously injured by frost. Keep the drains open, the ditches clear, remove all vegetation and litter, and use the drag frequently. If the road is kept dry to a depth of two feet below the surface there will be little trouble from the coldest winter.

Why You Sneeze.

There is more than one cause for sneezing, and persons may differ in their susceptibility to them. A bright light will cause some persons to sneeze, the pollen of certain plants will affect others and most people are likely to sneeze in the presence of dust. Such sneezing is due to superficial irritation.

The sneeze caused by the effect of a cold is different. It is an attempt of nature to cure you. She makes you sneeze for the same reason that she makes you shiver—to generate heat for warming the blood and preventing you from taking more cold—to help relieve the cold you have.

The sneezing from cold is not an act of the nose alone, this being merely the part of the body where it explodes. It is an act of the entire body, during which every muscle gives a jump. The body is affected by a spasmodic effort to warm the entire system and throw off the cold.

What Kansas Women Do.

Kansas is the women's free state. When women find their status in other states is confining their inalienable rights let them try the Sunflower state. Here are some of the things women can do legally in Kansas:

Can take back her maiden name after her husband dies, without legal process or legislative act.

If wife does not like either her name or her husband's, they can take a name that suits them better.

Can keep her own name when she is married.

Can persuade her husband to take her name and give up his family name, if she does not like it.

A woman can wear men's clothing without restrictions, except that she must not pose as a man.

She can vote at every election.

She can hold any office in the state and run for congress.

In other words, a woman in Kansas can do anything, almost, a man can do, and some things he can't.

"THE LANDLOPER"

A story so refreshing and withal so genuine in its difference from the ordinary as Holman Day's new novel, "The Landloper," is seldom met with in these days of much ingenious and colorful writing. Mr. Day has become well known as the author of stirring tales of the Maine lumber-camps; he has gained a reputation as a humorist by writing short stories full of a joyous absurdity, and containing an ineluctable element of surprise.

Mr. Day begins his story in that half-serious, half-whimsical manner, which is congenial to certain authors and which is not to be despised. At the outset one might suppose, indeed, that the story, "The Landloper," was going to be merely a succession of whimsies or of moderately romantic adventures of the casual sort.

To be sure, the vagabond, Walker Farr, who comes strolling down a dusty New England road, in the first chapter, is by no means an ordinary tramp. He is rather handsome, despite his ragged and unkempt appearance, and there is in him a certain manliness and there is in him a master of a subtle irony that is not native to the road. He comes upon a party of automobilists, who are struggling to put a new tire upon their machine, contemptuously helps the inefficient man of the party, refuses pay with something of a little short of insult, catches a look of gratitude and sympathy from a girl's eyes and swings along on his aimless way.

There are many adventures of the way—picturesque, amusing, sentimental, worthy of "Gil Blas." But the story is something more than a succession of such things. The adventures of the way lead naturally to events and situations far more absorbing. They are the adventures of a man who is a knight-errant, who prevails the whole story. Newly attired, he appears in the streets of a city of cotton mills.

Farr idly watches old Etienne Provancher, the "pickaroon," as with his pole and rake he clears away flotsam from the jaws of the turbines. As usual his curiosity is rewarded, for he sees Etienne drag up from the water the body of a drowned woman—a suicide. On the woman's clothes is found a note giving her address, and implying kindness for her little girl, Rosemarie, whom she has left shut up at home. Moved by the new spirit that is in him, Walker Farr goes to the tenement where the woman lived, finds Rosemarie, and takes her under his protection.

Not knowing what to do, he brings her to the house where Etienne Provancher lives; then, in order to earn money for the little girl, he goes to work at the mill. His affection for her makes him a good citizen; her death, instead of sending him off on the road again, plunges him into a political struggle. Little Rosemarie dies of typhoid; it is the scourge of the place, for the city, and indeed the whole state, is in the grip of the Consolidated Water Company, which pumps filthy water out of the river instead of securing a pure supply from the more distant lakes.

The fishy young man whom Farr helped with the automobile tire is Richard Dodd, nephew of Colonel Symonds Dodd, the autocrat of the Consolidated. The girl with whom Farr fell in love at first sight is Kate Kilgour, Colonel Dodd's private secretary, and she has promised to marry Richard—some time.

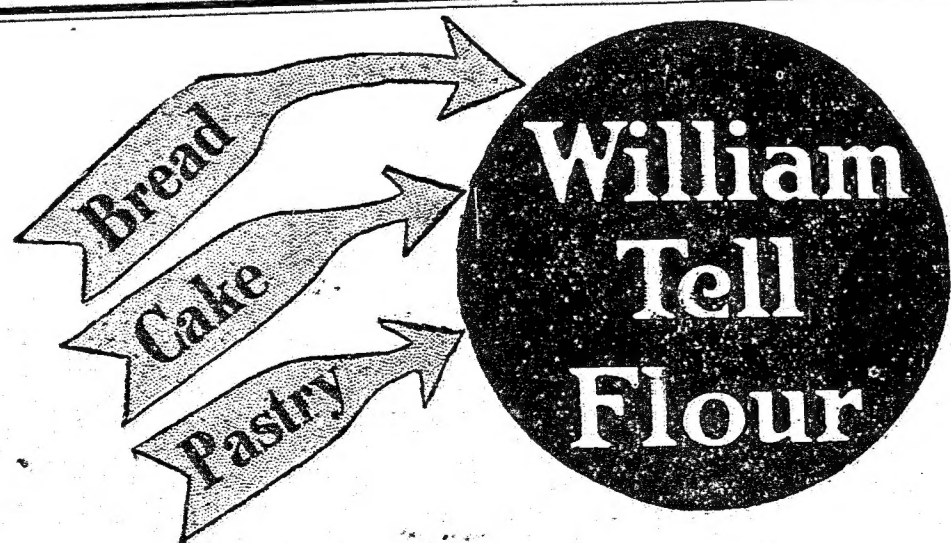

The message of the story is plain to read, yet seldom is a message so perfectly blended as here with the interest of an unpretentious tale of love and struggle. Seldom, too, is a well-constructed plot so well managed—as it is in "The Landloper,"—that it does not prematurely give itself away and never obtrudes its mechanism unnecessarily upon the reader.

Harper & Bros. are Mr. Day's publishers.

SLEEPING IN CAMP.

Balsam Browne is a Long Way Better Than Bare Ground.

It is folly to sleep on bare ground if one can help it, says a writer in the November Outing. A bed of balsam browse is not excellent, if properly made and frequently renewed; but it takes an hour to make one right, and on a full moon there is no browse, many a campground there is no browse, not even spruce. As a substitute one may use grass, ferns, the moss off old fallen trees, or even dead leaves. Such stuff, however, packs hard and spreads under one unless confined in a bag. For years I carried a bag of common tickling for this purpose, 2 1/2 feet wide by 6 1/4 feet long, and weighing only 1 1/2 pounds. A pillow bag, similarly stuffed with spare clothing atop, was not the least important item in my light kit. When one has room, it pays to carry a small feather pillow or a down cushion about 12 by 18 inches. The cotton mattress made for camp cots soon gets damp and hard. Use a folded wool comforter.

An air bed in luxurious in moderate weather, but too cold to use late in the season unless well insulated with blankets or a felt pad. The thinner blankets or the less objectionable it is in respect, as it does not then steal so much of one's animal heat.

Camp blankets should be all-wool. A cotton or part-cotton one is much more prone to absorb moisture from the damp woods air and to hold that which exudes from the body of the sleeper, hence it is clammy and colder than wool. The difference may not be noticeable in the dry air of a heated bedroom, but it is another bad quality of cotton is that it will spread through it from an ember cast out by the campfire, whereas the wool would merely burn a hole in wool.

The warmest blankets for their weight are those made of camel's hair. They are expensive, but one of them is as much protection as two common woolen blankets. They are favorites among experienced travelers all over the world.

Has Faith in Quick
Remedy for Catarrh

Noyes Drug Store Guarantees That Hyomei Will Relieve The Worst Cases of Catarrh in Town.

When one of the most reputable concerns in town guarantees that a medicine will produce benefit or they will refund the money, it speaks volumes for the merits of that remedy. It is in this way that the Noyes Drug Store is selling Hyomei, the treatment that has helped so many cases of both acute and chronic catarrh in town and vicinity.

Hyomei is not a pill nor is it a spray or a lotion that must be rubbed in. It is an oil, the air of which you just breathe in your nose, throat and lungs by the aid of an inhaler that comes with every outfit. Benefit will usually be seen from the very first treatment.

This air destroys all germs in the air passages and lungs and enriches and purifies the blood with the addition of ozone it supplies. It banishes catarrh of the head and throat and respiratory organs. Wherever these mucous membranes contain catarrhal germs, there Hyomei will do its work of healing.

The complete Hyomei outfit is inexpensive and includes an inhaler, dropper and sufficient Hyomei for several weeks treatment.

Remember that if Hyomei does not relieve you the Noyes Drug Store will refund your money.

THE LIBERTY BELL.

Has Taken Many Journeys—Latest, to the Panama Pacific Exposition. Our Liberty bell is a good deal of traveling body. It has a good deal of traveling to do. In fact, no other revered and valued relic in all the world has ever had such peregrinations.

No one in England would seriously think of taking the throne of Scone (or the British unity and sovereignty, out of Westminster Abbey, and giving it a trip around Great Britain for public inspection. The British idea is that the people should go to the relic rather than that the relic should journey to the people.

Here it is different, and every now and then the good Liberty bell leaves its safe and secure haven in Philadelphia to go upon risky expeditions hither and yon, because the people clamor and bring such powerful and persuasive pressure to bear upon its conscientious custodian, the city of Philadelphia, that there can be no refusal.

Hazardous and full of excitement are some of the Liberty bell's journeys have been, none of the list has exceeded in peril the very first journey which it ever took as our Liberty bell.

It was in 1777, it will be remembered, that the British under Gen. Burgoyne, came to occupy Philadelphia, and the American army was forced to evacuate. Knowing that the British would like nothing better than to get hold of this and other rebellious bells, a party of American soldiers took it down from its place in Independence hall (the state house) tower and chimes of Christ church with the seven chimes of St. Peter's. The Liberty bell had a rough ride to Allentown, guarded day and night by its faithful escorts of 200 North Carolina and Virginia soldiers. The cart broke down on the way under the Liberty bell's weight of 2000 pounds, and the precious bell had a narrow escape from accident.

Another stronger cart was procured, however, and it was safely deposited in Zion church, Allentown, where it rested safe from capture and possible conversion into British bullets. From September 1777, until June, 1778, when it was joyously returned to Independence hall in time to ring for victory at the surrender of Cornwallis.

The second journey of the Liberty bell appears to have been not a perilous one. It was a very different trip from that of the first days of the young republic, when the people were striving for freedom as a nation. Over a century had passed and now the bitterness of the Revolutionary days, but also the leader of the southern confederacy, came from a sick-bed to look upon it. He boarded the train at a point west of Mobile, Ala., with his little granddaughters, whom he lifted up in his arms that he might kiss them. Bending his uncovered head and bowing over it, he said:

"I believe the time has come when reason should be substituted for passion, and when we should be able to do justice to each other. Glorious old bell, the son of a Revolutionary soldier bows in reverence before you."

Such were the precautions taken for the care of the Liberty bell at that exposition that it was never removed from the handsome flat car on which it made the trip to and from New Orleans on its errand of inspiration.

All the great expositions have rejoiced in the wonderful presence of the Liberty bell. To Chicago in 1893, and later to Atlanta, Charleston, and St. Louis the old bell has cheerfully and triumphantly journeyed, greeted everywhere in a manner befitting a historic and significant relic by the patriotic and appreciative people.

"At Charleston," wrote an eye-witness, "I saw some of the people bend over its edges in their eagerness to kiss it, and many seemed to feel as if its presence was as sacred, as votaries at the altar of their church."

There could be no possible mistake that the bell symbolized a feeling that was in the very fiber of their being.

Everywhere it was acclaimed by multitudes with patriotic ceremonies, greetings, holidays, flower wreaths, and crowns of young and old.

In 1908 the Liberty bell re-enacted its own first journey, being swung on a rude cart to travel in imagination again to its birthplace, as part of the great Philadelphia historical pageant, a patriotic object, lesson for the thousands who saw it.

The longest journey which it has been called upon to take is that of 1915. In response to the insistent petition of the people of the Pacific coast, the Liberty bell travels 6000 miles to and from Philadelphia to become the most notable historic feature of the great Panama-Pacific exposition. The petition names. It is truly that on this journey every people will have an opportunity to look upon it than on any other of its notable pilgrimages.

An Emergency Shelf.

An emergency shelf it worth its weight in gold. How many times has it happened that you were out of just the thing that you wanted most and there was no one to send out for it? How many times has the laundress used the last of the soap, starch or bluing and has not told you until she is into the wash again?

If you will set aside a shelf in your kitchen and have upon it a little bit of everything, such as a box of matches, a couple of bars of soap, some canned goods, small bags of sugar, some salt, some gelatin, a bottle of vinegar—in fact, a small amount of all necessities which are not perishable—it will relieve you of a great deal of worry.

Do not use these things except in an emergency, and when you do use them see that they are replaced the next time you order groceries. The stock does not take a large outlay of money, and surely pays in peace of mind.

Howard of the Atherton store who is the manager of the Morey Farm, finding it hard to get all the help he needed on the new barn now under construction, was ably assisted one day in the past week by a dozen of the men in the neighborhood who were glad to give their services in time of need. Carpenters being hard to find Mr. Frank True sent three of his workmen to help for a few days on Mr. Morey's barn while his own work waits.

The State fire commissioner has been here for the past week inspecting the cause of the recent fire. It is the general opinion that the electric wires were not responsible, but the real cause is yet unknown.

IT CAN BE DONE.

The delightful weather of the past two months has shown how attractive Maine and the Maine climate would be to the tourist class if Maine would only make earnest endeavor to induce that class to come here at this season.

This autumn has been only repetition of past autumns, with the exception that the temperature has been a little higher. Always there have been clear skies, invigorating air, bright sunshine and magnificent scenery.

The July and August visitors are sure to come in numbers sunnier and fill our hotels during those months without any particular effort being made to attract them. If all Maine would bend its energies to building up a spring and autumn tourist business, the amount of money brought into the State would materially increase.

That there is a disposition to spend at least part of the fall here is shown where many a family which closed its summer cottage early in September has come back during October for a stay of a few days, in some cases for a couple of weeks.

There have been more parties of former summer residents running in by automobiles to spend Saturday and Sunday than there were ever seen before. This has happened without any effort on the part of the Maine citizen, these people coming of their own volition simply because they want to spend more time in the country.

Systematic advertising of Maine as a resort at this season of the year would bring some people who do not own cottages and who would seek accommodations at our hotels and rooming houses. And it is very safe to say that the man who once spends the month of September or October in Maine will return again at that time of the year and will tell his friends how attractive our State is at that season.

Some towns in the State are beginning to awaken to the fact that it is poor business for the Maine man to attempt to shut up shop the first week in September.

If the smaller Maine municipalities would make up their minds that they must each plan to keep their town running all the year round instead of confining all their business and efforts within a few weeks in the middle of the summer, the whole of Maine would be benefited.

Why Pay Extra for Dried-Up Tobacco?

That's what you do when you buy chopped-up tobacco in tins, bags or foil. Real tobacco flavor depends upon the leaf being preserved in its natural state, possible only by pressing the leaves into plug form and keeping it in a covering it with a natural leaf wrapper. The natural flavor and strength of tobacco escape when cut or granulated.

Take a Plug of Sickle that is even thoroughly dried so that when you whittle it off it crumbles into dust, but will burn and smoke smooth and cool as it has all of its natural tobacco flavor preserved, unevaporated in Plug Form.

Whittling a pipeful is little trouble, amply repaid in both quality and quantity. Try this experiment and judge for yourself.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Is Comparative Anatomy Conclusive
Comparative anatomy does not furnish conclusive proof that man is a frugivorous animal. It presupposes the apes, monkeys, and the orang-utan to be true, yet the orang-utan, on being domesticated, has been taught to eat and relish animal food. There is an inferior race of monkeys that subsist almost entirely on the flesh of other animals. If we knew nothing of the normal habits of the monkey, we would naturally conclude that the monkey is a carnivorous creature; and should man's structure be compared with that of the flesh-eating orang-utan of monkey, we would be inclined to class man as a flesh eater. Horses, cows, sheep, and other herb-eating animals can be trained to eat animal flesh, and have been known to prefer it, in time, to their natural diet. Comparative anatomy of value if we are acquainted with the original dietary habits of man and those of the lower creatures. Should the alimentary canal, the teeth, etc., of man be precisely the same in structure as those of the lion or the dog, it would not prove him to be a flesh-eating animal. Our conclusions should be based on the knowledge we have, not of man's present but of his original dietary habits.

Carnivorous Animal on Vegetable Diet.
The lion, the tiger, the dog, and other carnivorous animals may be trained to subsist entirely, and thrive, on a vegetable diet. This has been repeatedly done. There are dog trainers who feed their dogs on an almost exclusive non-flesh diet. The dogs are said to be more easily controlled; they are not so ferocious, and are more readily taught. Hunters usually feed their best dogs on corn bread. Flesh makes the dog stupid and short winded. When dogs are sick, meat is usually discontinued and they are fed instead on hard breads or biscuits. Even dogs, it seems, may enjoy better health, have a kindlier disposition, and live longer, on a non-flesh diet.

When Man Fell.
After man fell, and was sent forth from the Garden of Eden to cultivate the soil, God foresaw that he would be placed where there would be a scarcity of fruits and grains, or perhaps where they could not be obtained at all; so He said, "Thou shalt eat the herb of the field," the food given originally only to the lower creatures.

The Diet After the Flood.
During the Flood, vegetation was destroyed. Grass and other inferior herbage no doubt immediately began to spring forth after the water subsided. These afforded support to the herbivorous animals. But these herbs alone could not sustain man. On account of the absence of better food, God gave permission to Noah to eat, in addition to the herbs he might gather, the flesh of animals. God said, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things." Gen. 9:3.

Herbs are an inferior food for man when compared with grains, nuts, and fruits, and the flesh of animals is inferior to both. The necessity of subsisting on such food only existed until the earth could be brought under cultivation and again yield to man the pure foods best adapted for him—grains, nuts, and fruits.

Lawful, But not Profitable.
While it is certainly to subsist on the flesh of animals, certainly it is not profitable so to do, when better foods may be obtained. To eat and drink to the glory of God, or for strength and health, necessitates the selection of the purest foods that it is possible to obtain. This actually leads man to discard the flesh of animals. Not only so, but he will gradually eat less of the herbs, which all must acknowledge are inferior as a food for man.

The Diet of the Wilderness.
When the Lord led the children of Israel out of Egypt to the land of Canaan a land of plenty He educated them away from the use of flesh foods, and other inferior foods to which they had become accustomed in Egypt. The people rebelled, and asked for flesh. God gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls. Ex. 16:1-5. He then gave them statutes pointing out the clean and the unclean animals, and commanded them to eat only the clean.

ABOUT BOOMING MAINE.
The highway situation in Maine this summer has brought home to many Maine people, particularly editors and other obnoxious persons, the need of more ideas into print, the need of more boosting and less knocking when the subject of Maine is under discussion. For some reason or other, partly from Maine sources and partly through outside agencies, the word has gone out over and over that the rain had made Maine roads particularly bad and that tourist travel by automobile was a very precarious adventure.

This was rank nonsense. Of course the rain did not help Maine highways any more than thaws in other States, and the back roads in country towns have had small attractions for tourists, but the main roads have been, and are, wholly passable for any kind of a car or team. The chain of improved State highways across the State, with many side lines leading off, is not yet complete, and will not be until many more millions are spent, but a very substantial beginning has been made, and only on the detours, where construction work is going on, has there been the slightest trouble for any automobile party this summer. A large and growing part of Maine summer visitors are coming now by auto and there is no part of the State they cannot reach with comfort and pleasure.

The stories this summer, whatever their source or origin, can have no permanent effect, but their circulation is a reminder that Maine people themselves are too often indifferent to the advantages and opportunities of advertising their State in the right way and too often willing to let the wrong kind of advertising go abroad. There ought to be more of the spirit of certain Pacific coast places which have ready-made letters prepared for their summer visitors to send home to friends or to the home paper. All that is necessary is the signature and the address. The letter is of any kind desired, so long as it is complimentary to the place in question. If Maine landlords and local boards and organizations used this plan, and flooded the country with such personal letters to supplement the advertising that is obviously and openly advertising, there would be a spreading of information and enthusiasm that Maine would profit from. For what has California to offer tourists in comparison with those that Maine offers, but offers altogether too modestly?

If Maine people had only invested at home the many millions that they have sunk in foolish ventures in the West—but that is a tender subject, and one that it is hard to discuss with patience.
